A film by Kazik Radwanski

“While you’re not feeling any pain right now, you might feel a lot of pain in the future.”

“Who knows what the future holds?”

Tower centres on a thirty-four year old man, Derek, who lives at home with his parents in Toronto, Canada. Unlike his married brother who is expecting a baby, Derek is single and without a career. Although he aspires to become a graphic-animator, he works part-time at his uncle's construction company. Late at night he wanders the street alone and frequents nightclubs in search of companionship. Derek suddenly finds himself in an intimate relationship with a woman he meets, Nicole. When a neighbourhood raccoon becomes a constant nuisance by tearing up his family's garbage, Derek sets out to catch it.

Kazik Radwanski was born in Toronto in 1985. He studied filmmaking at Ryerson University and co-founded the production company MDFF. His films screened at the Berlinale Shorts Competition for three consecutive years with Princess Margaret Blvd. (2008), Out in that Deep Blue Sea (2009) and Green Crayons (2010). Tower is Radwanski's debut feature film.
